Green Viticulture

Considering the many centuries that have passed since the viticulture and winemaking became a valuable human activity it certainly has endured for most of that time in a very traditional and artisanal approach. It is only with the emergence industrial production concepts and techniques as well as multi-national chemical conglomerates in the mid-twentieth century (and their myriad influences) that there has been a re-energized appreciation of the benefits of viticulture that incorporates principles that are aligned with sustainable agriculture and eco-friendly relationships.

We look forward to this continuing as an evolving list in which we hope to include more of our current and future suppliers.

Look for these indication codes next to our products:

- S - Sustainable Farming
- B - Biodynamic Farming
- O - Organic Farming

Sustainable

Sustainable winemaking includes the following vineyard practices: using natural compost and soil amendments, and use of organic or naturally derived pesticides, herbicides and fungicides. Sustainable practices in these vineyards also extend to actions that have seemingly little to do with the production of grapes, such as cultivating areas for wildlife near vineyard sites (this provides vegetation for the animals, which keeps them from eating the grapes) and allowing weeds and wildflowers to grow between the vines (this stresses the vines and forces them to produce fewer bunches of grapes with a greater concentration of flavor) and using bio-diesel for tractors in the vineyards (which reduces harmful emissions among the vines).

Organic

Organic winemaking takes the steps taken by sustainable practices and builds on them. Organic wines are produced by using only organically grown grapes. No pesticides, herbicides, fungicides, chemical fertilizers, or synthetic chemicals of any kind are allowed on the vines or in the soil of the vineyards claiming to be organic. Strict rules govern the winemaking process such as hand-harvesting, the types of yeasts that can be used during fermentation and storage conditions in the vineyards of all imported and domestic wines that acquire certification.

Biodynamic

This is a holistic approach to the estate. It has four main principles: to respect the rhythm and balance of nature to farm according to a biodynamic calendar; soil health is encouraged with the use of only natural fertilizer treatments-no artificial products can be used, a diverse population of habitats is encouraged, use of cover crops, and all organic waste is reintroduced to the vineyard. Additional designations and practices may also include biodiversity in the vineyard, carbon-neutral power, hybrid vehicles, water recycling and reclamation, eco-friendly winery and warehouse practices and agricultural land preservation.

- 625791 Willakenzie Kiana Pinot Noir 2008, Yamhill Carlton..... WS-91, RP-90+, ST-90
The aromatics are mostly of red fruits persisting with tart cherries and floral tones such as rose petal. Champagne & Sparkling

Grower Champagne

"The Champagne region in France is dominated by a handful of brand names. These négociants and coopératives produce 80% of the total output in Champagne, yet they only own 12% of the vineyards. They may, by law, purchase as much of their grapes or pressed juice or already made sparkling wine (known as sur-lattes) as they wish from all over the region. They bring to market a mass produced commodity - the most successful processed agricultural product in human history - a Champagne annually. By contrast, Small Growers, or "récoltant-manipulants," may purchase only 5% of their fruit and handcraft their limited quantities of Champagne from individual villages and parcels where the inherent qualities of the vineyards imprint themselves into the wines. These winemakers are brave souls in an industrialized age: growing, crafting and bottling their own Champagne, offering it to the world as their life's work. They deserve your support."
